Austin's Four Hands, a prominent force in providing trendsetting furniture and home decor, will be celebrating the redesign of their Austin showroom—and you'll want to check it out. After partnering with renowned architecture firm Michael Hsu Office of Architecture, they're ready to show off the 20,000-square-foot space, which will feature a palette of warm, light, and neutral tones, along with original designs and rich textures. Expansive windows and tall ceilings welcome natural light and will provide a relaxing shopping experience for their future customers.

"The showroom expansion creates an environment for our loyal designer community to collaborate more openly and efficiently with their clients and our team," showroom manager Nealie Gillis says. "More space allows us to showcase a wider range of Four Hands top sellers while speaking to the latest industry trends."

The renovated showroom will also include a vast art collection from artists around the country as well as their selections of bestsellers and seasonal introductions from their extensive lines of home furnishings. With new arrivals weekly, however, the shop's offerings are constantly in flux. (Currently, an expanded outdoor selection is on display just in time for the warmer weather.)

"To be honest, it's something that we've never really seen before. It's going to be phenomenal and I'm really excited about that," visual merchandiser Kenneth Huerta says.

In celebration of the completed showroom, Four Hands Home is offering 20 percent off everything in-store from April 19 through April 30. From eye-catching bedroom sets to sleek patio furniture just in time for summer, stop by to view and collect the best in home design.
